Why have you never been married, May?"
This question was asked by a gentleman some thirty-five or six years of age, who had been for nearly twenty minutes closely watching the motions of a lady who sat near him at a work-table.

ing the motions of a lady who sat near him at a work-table.

The gentleman was a fine, noble looking man, with frank, well formed features and pleasant expression. He was handsomely dressed, and to judge by the looks of his hair, you might have said that he had a wife, had he looked in other respects like a married man—which he did not.

The room in which the two were sitting betokened wealth and taste. Its occupants were evidently in the upper ranks of life.

The lady addressed was a person of fair, interesting face and graceful form. She certainly did look remarkably well, as she bent her head with its abundant and shining hair, and plied her white hands in the task which employed her sight and apparently his whole thoughts.

Probably a conviction of her attractive-ness and worth had caused the question which her companion put in such a hearty abrupt tone, that May started and dropped the red worsted work upon which she had been intent.

"What a question," she cried with a light laugh—"just as if I cared about being married!" "Why should you not care, May? Surely it is the best and happiest state for a man or

"Granted with a proviso," said May: "but Mr. Rossiter, if you think so, why have you never married?"

"You are a true Yankee, May, and answer a question by asking another; but tell me, now, why you are, at thirty years of age, "How dare you say I am thirty years old?
Upon my word, if you were not brother to my sister-in-law, I'd not speak to you again for a week."

for a week."

May pretended to pout; and the pout was quite becoming to her full arched lips.

"Didn't you yourself tell me your age, and that only the day before yesterday? Your memory seems very short, Miss Benton."

"Well, I didn't expect you were going to throw it up to me that I was an old maid to pay me for my confidence in you,"

"Oh! May—did I say that? And if I did you can break my 'glass house' by flinging back my very taunt. But come, now, answer my question."

my question."
"I never could get any one to have me," said May shortly. "Are you satisfied?"
"No. You need not tell me that a person so attractive as you are has never yet had ardent lovers. I know better, May—so tell me truly why you are not Mrs. Somebody, now?"

those who knew her best were so lightly touched by it.

Roseiter had been for three or four years absent, and had newly returned when the above conversation took place. He was a comfortable old bachelor, happy in disposition, happy in possessing an independent fortune, and happy in his sister's home—not to say happy in the companionship of May, whom he honestly believed to be about the best and most lovely girl in the world. He had once dearly loved and suddenly lost a fair charming bride; and never since had he allowed himself to think of loving. And besides he did not know as he wished to marry. He was well satisfied with his "state and condition"—when he was at home. To be sure he did feel uneasy and dissatisfied all the while he was abroad. He did miss his sister so—and May—oh! how glad he was to see them when he returned—and how strange he thought it was that May didn't rush at him in the hall and hug and kiss him just as his sister did; but he took full satisfaction of the contrary creature when she did came to welcome him.

"And so May isn't married yet," he said,

come him.

"And so May isn't married yet," he said,
"Well it's rather too had; but I am glad of it."

May came very near sighing, but she did birth.

Well, Rossiter sat studying that still stern face before him, and he thought new thoughts—new as to their present relations.

"May," he said, at length, "May was ever there a man that you could have loved had he asked it?"

Like a crimson dye up rose the hot blood there a man that you could have loved had he asked it?"

Like a crimson dye up rose the hot blood of that bowed head, and the hard look was put on the instant—but she only said, not lifting her head or eyes—

"That you have no right to ask."

"I have no need to ask, dear May? Forgive me, if I mistake, but I feel as if I had been favored by a revelation of—of—that I have been a blind and stupid fellow as ever lived. May, if a man whom you regar-led as you do the plain old fellow before you, were to ask you for your love, what would you say?"

"Yes," said May, dropping her head till her face was hid among the worsted.

"Will you have me?" cried Rosaiter springing up and upsetting his chair.

"Yes," said a voice from the worsted depth.

depth.

Rossiter was on his knees, and most fervently embracing chair, worsted, and woman.

"Marry me? will you marry me?" said

"Yea," was heard from smid the worsted.

"Then hold up your head, and let me look upon the face of my wife. St. George, May, I believe I have loved you for years?"

"And I know I loved you almost ever since I knew you," said May, yielding to the gentle force which drew her from her low seat and led her to one where there was room for two.

"And that's why you never cared about any other man's company and attention, my May?"

"Yes," said May, "I see you understand it."

"Oh, May my best, my dear girl! Why didn't I think of this before? Why didn't you tell me, dear May?"

"Tell you! I should have looked well—I?"

"Indeed you would have looked well—looked charming in my eyes. What a pity you had not confidence enough in me to have allowed me to guess at the truth before, Why, May, I should have married you years ago, and have been the happiest and most grateful man alive. How stupid men can be! But come. May, we must go and tell my sister. She will be delighted, indeed."

And he led the embarrassed and blushing May into the presence of his sister, and admitted her to the great rejoicing, and in a few weeks from that day, Rossiter and May were no more twain, but one flesh. Nobody knows what a month may bring forth; nor to what the simplest question may lead one.

Plant Rhubarb as an Article of Food.

Plant Rhubarb as an Article of Food.

When Myatt first introduced the rhubarb into Covent Garden Market, London, he found it necessary to give away the leaf-stalks for an entire season, before he could induce his customers to purchase it. Now, this same gardener has more than a hundred acres in rhubarb, the produce of which is now sold in that single market. In this country, the rhubarb has gradually found its way into our markets, until the amount now raised in the vicinity of New York is truly enormous. Almost every market gardener has a half acre or more devoted to the growth of this crop. From less than three-quarters of an acre, we sold last year, before cherry-time, nearly five hundred dollars' worth of rhubarb; and if the market would have received it after cherrytime, the produce would have doubled the sum. Cherries and other fruits, however, take the place of rhubarb, and, therefore, it can only be sold at high prices early in the season; later it may be used for the manufacture of rhubarb wine. The kinds now preferred are Myatt's Linnæus, the best for winemaking; Cahoon's Seeding, and the Victoria. Market gardeners prefer raising, also, the Early Tobolsk, which, although inferior in quality, is so much earlier as to bring a high price in market.

Occasionally we find a dabbler in chemistry objecting to the use of rhubarb as food, from discovering by analysis that it contains Plant Rhubarb as an Article of Food.

try objecting to the use of rhubarb as food, from discovering by analysis that it contains oxalic acid. This is very much like the aroxalic acid. This is very much like the argument of those who recommend phosphatic rock to be used in place of stones, as a fertilizing material. Oxalic acid, as conditioned in the rhubarb plant, is not detrimental to health; they might as well object to the alcohol in a potato or in corn, and although they may attempt to draw lines of difference, arising from the oxalic acid being in part what is called a free acid, yet in practice it is found to be harmless.

In fertilizing rhubarb, it should be remem-bered that it is a rare feeder, and calls for a large amount of pabulum. We have found the largest results when nitrogenous manures have been freely used.—Working Farmer.

THE TOMB OF COLUMBUS .- Among the mul THE TOMB OF COLUMBUS.—Among the multitudinous attractions of Seville's great Cathedral is the tomb of Fernando Columbus, son of the immortal discoverer. He lies at one end of the central sisle, under a plain and unpretentious sepulchre. He was a being of no common order, and the deeds of his life were only shaded by the greater actions of the sire. One of the last efforts of his life was the establishing of libears at Savilla schiol. the establishing of a library at Seville, which soon ceased to exist after his death. Around the sacred spot are a number of inscriptions, and close at hand are some rude representa-tions of the caravals with which the daring navigator plowed the then nnknown sea. How small, how triffing, how all unfit they How small, how trilling, how all unfit they were for the gigantic enterprise. In the narrow strait, or along the shores of the Mediterranean, I have seen just such shells of ships, manued by men who would deem it madness to attempt crossing the ocean in them even in this day of advanced navigation. But the hand of God was in the enterprise, and, standing over the grave of the son, I invoked a blessing on the memory of the sire, in the name of my native land,—Spaniah Correspondence New York Evening Post.

The same number of the Tribuse observes concerning Money matters on Friday:

We have nothing new to report concerning the Money market. The same plethous exists which he a been observed during the last few weeks. We hear of first-class sixty-day acceptances having been passed to-day at 5 per cent, while six months bills have been negotiated at 5/5 and 5 per cent. Single-hame, first-class jobbing paper to mature in November is readily passed at 5 and 5/5 per cent., and is very scarce. Call leans remain without important change, but if possible more difficulty is experienced in placing large amounts at 5 per cent. on first-class collaterals, and we hear of some lonne made on Government and State Stocks as low as a per cent.

The market for fireign bills is firm, but the business is moderate. Storling is 1084@10 in transactions. France 5 154@95 154.

Cincinuati Market.

FLOUR—No change in the market; the demand is but moderate; the sales are confined to 650 bris. at $5.50@5.55 for superfine, and $5.65@5.90 for extra. We would add that it is difficult to buy or sell largely at the quotations. The receipts continue light. WHISKY—A dull and heavy market today, and prices $4c. lower, closing heavy; the sales were 1,500 bris. at 17%c., including that from wagon.

that from wagon.

OIL—A sale of 30 bris. Linseed at 67½c., and 25 bris. at 66½c.

GROCERIES—A fair demand for Coffee, with sales of 260 bags at 4½@14½c. Sugar dull, and the demand quite light, at 1½ to 8½c. for common to prime. Molasses quiet at 45@43c.

at 45@46c.

PROVISIONS—The market has not changed in any essential particular since Saturday; the demand for any article is only moderate, but holders generally ask rates a shade above those buyers are willing to pay. A moderate demand for mess Pork, with sales of 400 brls. at $17 25; not much offering at this rate. Bacon rather dull, and if any change, it is in favor of buyers. 30 hds. Sides sold as 9½cc., and 40 do. at the same rate; 16 hhds. Shoulders sold at 7½cc. A fair demand for Bulk Meats, and holders firm, contending for rates a shade above those offered: sales of 50 hhds. Shoulders at 6½cc, and 50 do. at Indianapolis, at the same rate, including parkages in both cases. Sides are held at 9½@8½cc, but we did not hear of a sale. Lard is generally held at 10½@10½cc, but 50 tierces sold at 10½cc, which is the outside rate offered.

WHEAT—There is a good demand for prime white, at $1 35@1 38, and for prime red at $1 30@1 35; Spring is dull at $1 18@1 120, and a good deal offering: sales of 150 bushels choice Kentucky white at $1 40, 150 do. prime red at $1 32, 300 do. do. do. at $1 34 delivered; 600 do. do. white at $1 37, 300 do. do. do. at $1 38.

CORN—The demand continues good, with light receipts, and the market firm at 44@45c. for ear in bulk, and 48c. for shelled.

OATS—There is a good demand, with light receipts, and prices are a shade higher. We quote them at 45@46c. in bulk: sales of 450 bushels from store at 45½cc; 600 do. in sacks at 46c.; 600 do. in bulk at 46c.

RYE—The market is dull and prices declined 1c. per bushel, closing at 94c. for prime: sales of 250 bushels at 94c.

BARLEY—There is a fair demand for prime full at 80@85c; inferior is dull and prices irregular.
